Young Filmmaker Looking To Knock Down The Doors Of Hollywood

BIRMINGHAM, AL (September 21, 2009) - Contraction Entertainment is the home for the South's next big Hollywood connection. Twenty-one year old company owner and filmmaker, Kenton Bartlett, has already begun principle photography for his first feature film, which will star Mark Boone, Jr. (Batman Begins, Memento) and Melora Walters (Magnolia, HBO's Big Love). Missing Pieces (Working Title), written by Bartlett, is a feature film that will surely bring fresh entertainment for all audiences to enjoy.

Bartlett graduated from American University in May, 2009 with a double major in both Film & Media Arts and The Business of Film. Bartlett's initial plan for working in the industry was to become a film critic; "Then boredom on campus (American University) and the guilt of an expensive tuition lead me to take advantage of everything on campus - like the cool computer programs". As he continued to take more courses in AU's School of Communication, his attention to making his own films became more profound.

Missing Pieces is a film that provides a mixture of practical locations, marketability, and personal emotional resonance. In the film, a kidnapper takes two lonely souls and tries to make them better off by putting them through a series of distinct and unusual tasks. It is a film that tells the story of four strangers who change each other's lives.

This four-year project, underway since March, 2008, is not a conventional Hollywood production. No executives or professional crews. Instead, the production model revolves around working with a team of highly motivated aspiring filmmakers, actors, and cineasts to create the movie. Currently, over 100 crew members and over 40 actors are eagerly on board working without pay. With only an $80,000 budget, Bartlett says he is "relying on community support" to assist in bringing his story to life. In addition, Bartlett is also hoping to attract support from any interested in getting involved.
